EDWARD, THE SEVENTH.

It seems to be the impression in som quarters that there will be an upheav mil in Great Britain as the result of the accession to the throne of Edward VII There are others who think it will mean a speedy termination of the Bour war upon lines more favorable to the Booth Africans. Neither of these resuits is at all probable. From all th evidences which are now in sight seems altogether likely that the same policy which has heretofore been pursued in South Africa will be continued to the end. There will be no more at tempts at conciliation than those which have already occurred, and with refgrence to other countries Great Britain's policy will be practically the same that it has been heretofore. It may be taken for granted that the new king, whose will power and determina tion are quite inferior to those posses. ed by the queen, will continue to follow in her footsteps to pursue the poiley which she has tald down.

Indeed, so far as the temper of the British people can be judged at this distance, they are largely in accord in the matter of prosecuting the war it Bouth Africa and continuing the policy which has been laid down by the queen and her prime minister. There is every indication, therefore, that the reigning of Edward VII will not be marked by any notable departures one way or an other, but that he will endeavor to rule the kingdom quietly and peacefully so for as other nations are concerned and swill continue the internal policies as aiready outlined.

A JUST TRIBUTE.

Representative Carl A. Dalies of Va tends county has made his mulder speech in the lower house of the territorial legislature, and demonstrated the fact that he is quite an orator. In his clogy upon Capt. Maximiliano Luna who was drowned while on the staff of General Lawton, in active operations munings the rebels in the Philippine islands, Mr. Dalles paid a just tribute to the dead soldier. The Citizen uses the following extracts:

The Spanish was ever taking a counsel of fear, knowing all the trials, ha. dahips and dangers of war; still feworish with the heat of conflict, the old graving to revenge insult to American arms again bore him away. Away. Philippines while on General Lawton's away over ten thousand miles of Pacific seas. Away to still more glory and renown to greater deeds. Away, away to his last great sacrifice. Away to a hero's grave, a watery grave, alas, yoy hearers, an unknown grave far from the sunny skies of the land that wave him birth. Far from those that he loved. Died-not on the field of hat. tie, but pevertheless died for that flag for which he had stricken many a blow and well. Died under that flag in the faithful performance of duty, as a soldier, as a man. Died for that flag which has been fostered and reared in the life's blood of fust such as he. The greatest monument to his mem ory is the giory of triumph of our belover stars and stripes in the war in which he took such noble part. All or teacher is the son of one of the school this great union forms a monument to directors and is charged with being his memory, though sad indeed, not over his lonely grave.
